How do I remove my account from the website?

Customer Support - 2020-04-23 - in Seeking

First, it's important to clarify whether you'd like to deactivate or delete the account.

Deactivating (or disabling) an account means...

- The profile will no longer be viewable on Seeking.com -- however, you can reactivate the account at any time by simply logging in.
- Your profile information and photos will be removed from the website, but can be retrieved in the event you'd like to reinstate the account.
- Deactivating or disabling the account will not automatically cancel any existing auto-renewal membership.

To Reinstate a deactivated account: simply login using your existing username and password. This will initiate an email alert with a link inside, which you can click on to complete the reactivation.

Deleting an account means...

- The account and all profile information will be permanently removed from our systems. You cannot reinstate the same account once this is done.
- Should you choose to come back to Seeking.com, you'll need to register a new account.
- Any sent messages will remain in their recipients' inboxes, even after your account is deleted.

* It's important to note..* ***

*We do not refund Premium memberships. By permanently deleting your account, you will lose any unused time left on your Premium account.
